Editorial Review

Review

"The serial context that frames the publication of A Companion to Spanish Cinema should not detract from its status as a true event in the field of Spanish cinema studies in the English language. This volume, expertly compiled by Jo Labanyi and Tatjana Pavlovic, reads as a 'who's who' in the field of Spanish film studies; more to the point, it provides a reliable guide to key critical topics in the history of Spanish cinema - from its beginnings to the contemporary moment - and an authoritative intervention from multiple perspectives."

(Screen, Spring 2014)

"Well-illustrated and with excellent notes and suggestions for further reading, as well as a useful index, this volume will appeal to a wide audience and sets a high standard for other volumes in the series." (Reference Reviews, 1 September 2013)

"Many of the individual chapters draw on a chronological approach, but this clearly organized history is unique for its thematic structure. Topics slighted in conventional histories receive their due here ... Summing Up: Highly recommended. Upper-division undergraduates and above." (Choice, 1 September 2013)

"From major auteurs to minor genres, and from conditions of production and distribution to wider national and transnational contexts, this book gives a comprehensive account of Spanish cinema."

- Steven Shaviro, DeRoy Professor of English, Wayne State University
