An Evening with Edgar Allan Poe: with Poems and Short Stories by E.A. Poe By Katherine Ashe, Edgar Allan Poe

Soon after Virginia, his young wife has died, Poe is urged by friends to marry again. Poe considers his life, from his early childhood with his actress mother to his marriage to his beloved cousin when she was fourteen. Originally commissioned from Katherine Ashe as a one man play for New York City Historic House Trust's Poe Cottage in the Bronx, "An Evening..." is a brief, lyrical biography with selections from Poe's poems and a short stories that illuminate his writing and his life.

Editorial Review

About the Author

During the thirty-five years Katherine Ashe spent researching and writing her series on Simon de Montfort, the thirteenth-century founder of Parliament, she supported the project by writing several plays on historical subjects. In 1997 the New York City Historic House Trust commissioned her to write a monologue play for the Poe Cottage in the Bronx. Immersing herself in all of Poe's writings, along with letters and biographies, she says she felt "encumbered like a bee so laden with pollen that it couldn't fly." She had no idea what to write until one morning she woke and knew the writing would come now. Sixteen hours later she left her computer with no idea of the passage of time or even if what she had written was coherent. Except for the removal of a few notes that served as stage directions, this text is exactly what was written then.
