Please answer true or false:

- 1.I like to see the good in everyone, and I give everyone the benefit of the doubt.
- 2.I believe everyone is like me and tells the truth, or at least when they're lying, they know that they're lying.

- 4.I forgive easily and often.
- 5.I am extremely loyal.
- 6.I feel bad when I have to walk away from people, even when they've hurt me.
- 7.I'm a peacemaker and rarely express anger, even when people have hurt and betrayed me.
- 8.I tend to turn the other cheek; therefore, I make a lot of excuses for people's abuse: you know, I feel bad that they had bad parents, blah, blah, blah, yada yada yada...

9.I never make people account for their bad actions, so, everyone gets away with murder around me.

10.I'm a giver, and I really don't expect much in return.

After reading the above statements, and answering true to all or most of them, you're now thinking: Wow! I really am a nice person! Think again. These personality traits are the ones that keep you trapped in unhappy and unhealthy relationships. Reading this book will give you the strength and courage to know when enough is enough!

You will be shocked to learn that the above traits are a form of narcissism. What, me a narcissist? Yes, good people have their own form of narcissism, but I will refer to you as a "Well-Meaning Narcissist," as opposed to a "Self-Serving Narcissist."

Having the above personality traits may make you look like a saint, a Christian martyr, but isn't it egotistical of you to think that you can fix people and that all the mess of the world is your fault?

If you possess any one of the traits listed in the above ten statements, or, what's worse—many of these traits—then you really, really need this book!
